If Applicable, Special Historical Background: ~~One Laptop per Child at Kagugu Primary School in Kigali, Rwanda in 2007 the One Laptop per Child? program of the Media Lab of Massachusetts Institute Technology unveiled their $100 laptop. It initially cost about $188 per unit but the cost was expected to come down to $100 per unit when production reached the 50 million mark.~~

~~The main force behind the project was Nicholas Negroponte, the former head of MIT's Media Lab. His hope was to put computers in the hands of millions of schoolchildren in the developing world. Endorsed by the United Nations and unveiled at the 2006 World Economic Forum in Davos, the devise is about the size of a textbook, has wireless capabilities and can operate in places without electricity. Critics dismiss it as a "gadget? not a computer and say it has a limited range of programs and capabilities.~~
